

I am a Colorado Springs native and graduated from Palmer High School downtown. I love the rich culture our city has to offer. Once I graduated high school, I spent the next four years studying English/Communications at Adams State College in Alamosa, Colorado. While there, I focused my free time working as a student deejay and in radio management. I also worked for the student newspaper as an editor and writer, developing a strong passion for writing and journalism. With my degree in hand, I transitioned into a job as a reporter, where I learned the ins and outs of Pampa, Texas. As a reporter, I was responsible for photography, content, and editing of the small daily newspaper. It was a rich and memorable time in my life, but I craved to be in the classroom and apply the writing skills I learned through the job. I moved back to Colorado Springs to be with my family, and worked as an aide at Colorado Springs Charter Academy in sixth grade. I now teach grammar and writing in the middle school of CSCA and I genuinely could not be happier with the position, students, facility, and faculty.
